Fulton J. Sheen was a prominent American Roman Catholic bishop, theologian, and media personality, born on May 8, 1895, in El Paso, Illinois. He gained fame in the mid-20th century through his television program "Life Is Worth Living," where he effectively communicated Catholic teachings to a broad audience. Sheen was also a prolific author and served as a bishop in Rochester, New York. He died on December 9, 1979 after years of suffering from heart trouble.

Fulton Sheen significantly influenced modern Catholic teachings by effectively utilizing media to communicate the Gospel, making complex theological concepts accessible to a broad audience. His innovative approach to evangelization and emphasis on the integration of faith with contemporary culture continue to resonate within the Church today.

In 2002, his cause for canonization formally opened in the Diocese of Peoria, where he had been ordained a priest. A decade later, Pope Benedict XVI recognized Sheen's heroic virtue, and he was declared Venerable in 2012.

Then came the miracle that would clear the way for beatification...

In September 2010, a baby boy was born without a heartbeat or respiration. His parents prayed for Fulton Sheen's intercession. The child remained without signs of life for 61 minutes before his heart began beating. Remarkably, he survived and recovered without any neurological issues.

In 2019, Pope Francis authorized the decree recognizing the miracle, clearing the way for Sheen's beatification. On September 24, 2026 he took another step toward canonization when he was beatified in St. Louis Missouri.
